

Your plan for clipping sports

Sports moments travel fast. Your guide covers how pay works, how to set up, and how to pick the right campaigns.

01

What clipping is, and how campaigns work

Clipping means taking the best moments from longer content (a song, a show, a stream, a game) and turning them into short videos for TikTok, Instagram Reels, YouTube Shorts and X.

Artists, brands and shows pay for this, because clips put their content in front of people who would never see it otherwise. That is where you come in.

How a campaign works

A campaign goes live. An artist, brand or show sets a brief, a rate per 1,000 views and a budget.

You pick it. You choose campaigns that fit your niche and your audience. Nobody assigns them to you.

You post on your own accounts. You make clips from the source content and post them, following the brief.

Every post is checked. Posts are reviewed before they count. Views on approved posts are the views you get paid for.

You need a phone, an editing app and the patience to learn what makes people stop scrolling. That last part is the real skill, and the rest of this guide is about it.

02

How clipping pays

Each campaign sets a rate per 1,000 views. You get paid for the views that pass review, at that rate.

A worked example

Campaigns in the network have paid $2.00 per 1,000 views. At that rate, a clip with 50,000 counted views earns $100. A clip with 5,000 counted views earns a tenth of that.

What decides what you earn

The rate. Rates are set per campaign, so they change from one campaign to the next.

Counted views. Only views on posts that pass review are paid. A big clip that breaks the brief earns nothing.

The cap. Campaigns can set a maximum payout per clip, so one clip cannot earn without limit. Check the cap before you plan around one big clip.

How many good clips you post. Most views come from a few clips that take off. More good attempts means more chances.

Nobody can promise you an income from clipping, and you should be careful of anyone who does. What you earn depends on your clips and the campaigns you pick.

Your goal: a full-time income

Treat it like work from day one: a few accounts, a posting schedule, and a record of which clips did well. Grow into more campaigns once one or two are working, and keep a buffer, because payouts depend on how each month's clips perform.

03

Getting set up

You have clipped before, so focus on the set up that campaigns check.

Keep accounts clean. One niche per account, a clear name and photo, and nothing that looks like an official page.

Keep a record. For every clip, note the campaign, the hook, the length, the audio and the views after a day and a week. After a month that record tells you more than any guide.

Check each brief. Every campaign has its own rules about what to post, where and how. Clips that break the brief do not count, however well they do.

Build a system. A folder per campaign, a list of moments to cut, and set times to post. Clipping rewards people who are consistent.

04

A day of clipping

- 1. Read the brief. Note the rate, the cap, what must be in every clip and what is not allowed.
- 2. Find the moments. Watch or listen to the source content and write down the times of every strong moment: a line, a reaction, a drop, a turn.
- 3. Cut several versions. For your best moments, try two or three different hooks. Small changes in the first second can change everything.
- 4. Post at good times. Spread posts out across the day and across your accounts rather than posting everything at once.
- 5. Check the numbers. After a day, look at which clips kept people watching. Make more of what worked.
- 6. Submit and track. Make sure each post is submitted the way the campaign asks, so it can be reviewed and counted.

05

What makes a clip travel

A strong hook. The first second decides everything. Start on the moment, not before it. If you need setup, put it in a caption on screen.

Captions on screen. Many people watch with the sound off. Big, readable words keep them watching and tell them why to care.

Trending audio, used well. Sound pulls people in, but only when it fits the clip. On music campaigns, use the official track the brief asks for.

The right length. As long as the moment needs and no longer. Cut every second where nothing happens.

A clear ending. End on the payoff, or point people where to go next, as the brief asks.

Edit for emotion. Find the most striking moment: the laugh, the shock, the drop. Cut everything around it.

Quality and originality. Vertical, sharp and clean. Do not just repost. Add captions, timing and framing that make the clip yours.

Where you post

You picked Instagram Reels and X. Each one rewards something a little different.

Post on Instagram Reels first. Add the others once you know which clips work.

01

Instagram Reels

Reels reward clean, well edited clips. Many campaigns ask for Reels, so it is worth having an account ready.

X

X is good for timely clips: a goal, a quote, a moment from last night. Speed matters more than polish there.

06

The rules that keep you paid

Never pretend to be an official page. Do not use names, logos or photos that make people think you are the artist, brand or show.

Follow each platform's rules. Accounts that break them get limited or banned, and views on a banned account do not count.

Say when content is paid. Where the rules require it, label paid posts clearly.

Never fake views. Bought views, bots and engagement tricks are caught in review. Posts like that do not count, and they can get you removed from campaigns.

Do not delete posts. Deleted posts stop counting. Leave approved posts up.

Follow the brief. Every post is checked before it counts. A clip that breaks the brief is not paid.

07

Picking sports campaigns

Sports clips live on timing. The goal, the save or the post match quote is worth the most in the first hours.

Be fast. Have your editing set up so you can post within the hour.

Show the reaction too. The crowd, the commentator or the bench is often what people share.

Pick sports you follow. You will know which moment matters before everyone else does.

08

Getting better, clip by clip

Every clip is a test. The numbers tell you what to change.

Watch the first seconds. If most people leave early, the hook is the problem. Try starting later in the moment, or put a caption on screen straight away.

Watch completion. If people leave halfway, the clip is too long. Cut harder.

Copy your own winners. When a clip does well, make more like it: same kind of moment, same style of hook, same length.

Change one thing at a time, so you know what made the difference.

09

Your next step

Join the network. Inside you will find the campaigns that are live right now, each with its own brief, rate and budget, so you can see the rules before you join one.

Pick one that fits your niche, read the brief, post your first clips, and you get paid for the views that pass review.
