

Your plan for a product launch

A launch needs to be seen fast and seen often. Your guide shows how clips put the product on feeds during launch week, where to post first, and how you only pay for counted views.

01

What clipping does for a product launch

A launch has a short window. People need to see the product many times, from many places, while it is new.

Clippers put the product into short videos on their own accounts: unboxings, reactions, the moment it does something useful. It looks like something people share, not something someone bought, so people watch it instead of skipping it.

Because many clippers post at the same time, the product shows up across feeds during launch week instead of one post at a time.

You told us you want more sales or sign-ups. Clips create the attention; your page, link or store has to catch it. Make sure the place people land on is clear and quick before the first clip goes out.

02

How a campaign runs

You set the goal. We run the network. There are four steps.

Brief and strategy. You work with our team to set your niche, your content, the rate per 1,000 views and the budget.

Clippers activate. Your campaign goes live to the network. Clippers choose it based on fit and audience, so the people posting are the ones whose followers fit your content.

Review before it counts. Every post is checked before it counts, and every approved post links to its source.

Pay for counted views. You pay only for views that pass review. Posts keep working after the budget is spent.

The network is not a fixed roster. It is a network of clippers who pick the campaigns that suit them, which is why it can reach many niches at once.

Where to post first

You picked Instagram Reels, TikTok and X. Here is the order we would start in, based on what you want the campaign to do.

Start with Instagram Reels. Add the others once the first clips are moving.

01 Instagram Reels

Reels sit next to Stories, profiles and links, so people who like a clip can find you, follow you and buy in a few taps.

02 TikTok

The feed shows clips to people who do not follow anyone yet, so a new song, product or moment can reach strangers on day one.

03 X

X moves fast around news, sport and culture. It works best next to a moment people are already talking about.

What counts and what does not

Not every view is paid for. Every post is checked before it counts.

What counts. Views on clips that follow your brief, are posted on a real account, and pass review. Every approved post links back to its source, so you can open it and see it for yourself.

What does not count. Clips that break the brief or the platform's rules, posts that are deleted, and anything that does not pass review.

You see it all on a live dashboard with a direct link to every approved post. You set the rules, the rate and the budget. Nothing counts until it passes review.

Proof from real campaigns

Your next step

The next step is a call with our team. We will look at your content, your timing and your budget, and tell you plainly what a campaign could do.

Bring three things: the content you want clipped, the dates that matter, and the budget you have in mind.

Pick a time

Because you are deciding for a team, bring whoever signs off to the call. It saves a round of back and forth.
