

Your plan for clipping music

Music campaigns pay for counted views on clips that use the track. Your guide covers how pay works, how to set up, and what makes a clip travel.

01

How clipping pays

A brand, artist or show starts a campaign and sets a rate per 1,000 views. You make clips from their content, post them on your own accounts, and get paid for the views that pass review.

Three things decide what you earn: the rate the campaign sets, how many of your views pass review, and how many campaigns you work. Rates are set per campaign, so they change from one campaign to the next.

Nobody can promise you an income from clipping, and you should be careful of anyone who does. What you earn depends on your clips and the campaigns you pick.

You told us you want some money on the side. Start with one campaign you understand well and do it properly. Consistency on one campaign beats ten clips spread across ten.

02

Getting set up

You do not need much to start: a phone, an editing app and an account on each platform you want to post on.

Make new accounts. Use accounts made for clipping, with a clear name and photo that fit your niche. Never make an account that looks like an official page.

Pick one niche. Music, sports, gaming or shows. A page that always posts the same kind of clip grows faster than one that posts everything.

Learn one editing app well. Cutting, captions and timing matter more than effects.

Post a few practice clips before you join a campaign, so you know how your accounts behave.

What makes a clip travel

A strong hook. The first second decides everything. Start on the moment, not before it.

Trending audio, used well. Sound pulls people in, but only when it fits the clip.

A clear ending. End on the payoff, or point people where to go next.

Edit for emotion. Find the most striking moment: the laugh, the shock, the drop. Cut everything around it.

Quality and originality. Do not just repost. Add captions, timing and framing that make the clip yours.

Post on TikTok first. Add the others once you know which clips work.

01 TikTok

New accounts can reach people fast, because the feed does not wait for followers. Good for testing which clips work.

02 YouTube Shorts

Shorts can keep picking up views for weeks after you post, which matters when you are paid per counted view.

04

The rules that keep you paid

Never pretend to be an official page. Do not use names, logos or photos that make people think you are the artist, brand or show.

Follow each platform's rules. Accounts that break them get limited or banned, and views on a banned account do not count.

Say when content is paid. Where the rules require it, label paid posts clearly.

Follow the brief. Every post is checked before it counts. A clip that breaks the brief is not paid.

05

Picking music campaigns

Music campaigns pay for views on clips that use the track. The best clips make people want to hear the song again: a lyric that hits, a live moment, a dance, a reaction.

Pick campaigns for songs you would actually play, in the genre your accounts already post. Your followers will tell you fast whether a sound fits.

Your next step

Join the network. Inside you will find the campaigns that are live right now, each with its own brief and its own rate.

Pick one that fits your niche, read the brief, post your first clips, and you get paid for the views that pass review.
